Details

This acacia organic raw edge slab is mounted on a sleek black rectangular metal sheet. It looks to me like a wave. This sculpture showcases the acacia wood's grain and its beautiful raw edge components. Acacia is an exotic type of wood that grows in the Pacific Islands, Africa, Australia, and Asia. The richness of the acacia wood's grain is incomparable. Its golden brown hue and velvety-smooth touch, also add a warm touch to the artwork. The roughness of the material contrasts with the meticulous craftsmanship used to polish the curves of the natural wood. In this piece, labor and nature converge, showcasing the harmony between the material and the sculptor and the strength of nature.
