Details

This piece is one of his rare painting which does not features women. Neil Nagy was born in 1941 in the East Los Angeles Latino community of El Sereno. He is a figurative expressionist painter who draws upon the single, powerful human form as a way to explore the humanistic, personal, and spiritual paths. Nagy's inspirations have continually evolved. He came to appreciate the culture and art of Mexico as he traveled extensively to embrace the colorful life of the people and the country and to study ancient Mayan civilizations. He is also influenced by the work of Rembrandt, Constable and Turner. Nagy received his education at San Jose State College for Industrial Design and Art and later at the Instituto Allende in San Miguel Allende. In 2006 Nagy was selected for an important "Bay Area Figurative" Exhibition where he showed alongside Diebenkorn, Park, Oliveira, and others. He has held exhibitions internationally and has been included in a number of corporate and private collections.
