Details

This desk lamp by Aluminor combines functional efficiency with bold modernist style. Its hemispherical red metal shade contrasts sharply with the black perforated neck, creating a dynamic play of color and texture. The flexible gooseneck stem allows for adjustable positioning, while the weighted circular base ensures stability during use.

The lamp reflects the industrial aesthetic that characterized late 20th-century European lighting design. The bright red enamel adds vibrancy, making it as much a decorative accent as a practical source of illumination.

About the Manufacturer

Founded in 1950 in Nice, France, Aluminor is recognized for producing high-quality lighting fixtures that seamlessly blend utility with design innovation. The company specialized in affordable, modernist lamps that often featured bold colors, streamlined silhouettes, and durable construction. Their designs remain collectible due to their balance of functionality and mid-century-inspired style.

Context and Legacy

This lamp exemplifies the democratization of modern design in the postwar era, when manufacturers like Aluminor sought to bring stylish, contemporary lighting into everyday homes.
