Paul Klee (1879 - 1940) was a Swiss-German artist and one of the most influential figures in 20th-century art. Influenced by many movements, including Expressionism, Cubism, and Surrealism, Klee developed his own highly individualistic style, creating a rich and varied body "often witty and childlike in its tone" infused with mysticism, musicality, and theories he developed on form and color. In addition to his groundbreaking visual output, Klee is also renowned for his writings about art, including his many lectures at the Bauhaus School of Art, design, and Architecture, where he taught.
