Details

The oil painting on canvas by Pat Berger depicts a tall red rose rising above its leaves.

Berger is renowned for her ability to connect viewers with the natural world. The bright red and green colours of the rose and the bush create a vivid contrast against the dark background. The artist has captured the intricate details of each leaf with remarkable realism, showcasing the subtle variations in tone and texture. She even features delicately the tiny dew drops on the leaves.

This painting is the perfect gift to replace a real rose since it will last forever.

Pat Berger is born in New York in 1929, and has captivated audiences with her remarkable works for decades. She received her training in painting at the Art Centre School of Design and U.C.L.A. during World War II, where she absorbed modernist concerns for expression, composition, and colour-light interaction.

Berger's career spans several decades of painting, alternating between figures and landscapes and examining the natural landscape and social narratives.

Berger's latest collection of trees and branches, which includes the rose bush in this painting, reflects her central concerns with nature and beauty. She has been featured in many galleries and museums, including recent solo shows at the Karpeles Manuscript Library Museum in Santa Barbara and the University of Judaism in Los Angeles. Berger has also received numerous awards and honours for her work, including a fellowship for The Julia and David White Art Colony in Costa Rica, a National Watercolour Society Purchase Award, and a California Community Foundation, Brody Arts Fund Fellowship Award. Her work is featured in numerous public collections, including the San Diego Museum of Art, the Long Beach Museum of Art, the Skirball Museum, and the Palm Springs Desert Museum.
