Details

This captivating collage from CASH, created in 1976, offers a good example of abstract expressionism, focusing on the formal qualities of artwork rather than its representational subject matter. This artistic movement was defined by experimentation with bold yet arbitrary colours, reconstructed shapes, and rejection of realistic three-dimensional perspective. The contrasting colours used for featuring these two faces combined with large brushstrokes and strategic collage elements adds further depth to the artwork's visual language. Original white painted wood frame.
