Details

This Tree Branch wall sculpture by Curtis Jeré for Artisan House is a striking composition of metal artistry, featuring a gracefully branching form adorned with copper leaves. Unlike more geometric interpretations in Jeré's body of work, this piece embraces a naturalistic approach, capturing the organic movement and delicate intricacy of real branches.

The sculpture's layered construction creates depth, with the interplay of light and shadow enhancing its presence on the wall. Designed with one attachment point, it appears to float slightly off the surface, lending an airy, sculptural quality to any space.

Curtis Jeré, the artistic identity of Curtis Freiler and Jerry Fels, revolutionized mid-century wall art with their dynamic metalwork. Since 1963, their creations—ranging from abstract compositions to nature-inspired forms—have been celebrated for their craftsmanship and timeless appeal. This piece exemplifies their ability to transform metal into fluid, expressive designs that bring warmth and movement to interior spaces.
